Inspired by a set of stickers I saw and acquired, years ago I created this little booklet about people around the world. I used the same countries/costumes included in the sticker set, though they were heavily European centrist. Then with the help of an almanac and a little research, I collected information about each country. Young children will be most interested in the pictures, maybe the greetings, and that's fine. I included the other because it was interesting to me, and maybe would be interesting the the child as s/he grew. I wanted to start and end with English speaking countries (my target audience), so they'd know what the words in other languages meant. I tried to travel in a mostly easterly direction around the world, though with as little jogging around as possible. I think it's interesting to see how countries near one another have similar words for the same thing.
