

Books to Check Out—Learning Values

The idea is to teach virtues through children's literature. I would probably choose different pieces, but this book is worth browsing (check it out at the library or bookstore) to inspire your own choices and ideas.

Simple limited text in large font, nicely illustrated. Social skills and being respectful for primary grades. Ideas at the back for reinforcing skills, and an illustrated list of other titles in the series.

Simple early reader. Child likes her messy room, but mom doesn't. Good opportunity to talk about why to keep one's domicile clean. Details to look for in the pictures.

A Little Critter book. The fancy dinosaur toy keeps breaking. The kid at last decides to trade it in for a construction set, that is already in parts. Brief text in large font, 1-2nd grade reading level, but appropriate topic for younger children.

Read aloud. Brief text, engaging illustrations. Willie found a wallet. What should he do? Mother takes him downtown to put an ad in the paper. Many people call, but finally the right one. Willie finds how good it feels to give the man back his wallet with all his family pictures. And Dad gives Willie a wallet of his own, with his mom and dad's pictures.

I'm Going to Read level 1. Up to 50 words, K-grade 1, age 4-6. Ideas for parents in the front. Boy tries to give alternate explanations so he won't have to clean up spilled milk. Taking responsibility.

Read aloud about responsibility. Megan's father asked her to feed the pigs, but not to open the gate. Also about making judgments. Troubles ensue. You can check it out online, such as: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pkjLrTMCw0s>

Board Book—simple text, mostly one or two words per page, large font. Appealing illustrations on double page spreads. Suggestions for parents and caregivers at the end. Other books in the series on back cover.
